Default Night Ops X

Night Ops IX is past 400 so rather than kill the forum software before a lock, may as well start a new topic.

Post your night op stories and tips here.

From the last thread:

Well tonight was just going out for a cycle so brought a couple things with me (spanner key, screwdriver) , was originally going to snatch a solar panel from one of those little boxes on the side of a cycle path, but it was right over a junction and cars going past quite often, so I just left it eventually ..

Then on the way back I see an electrical panel for streetlights, my spanner key fits it so I open it up, a large switch inside and the cables coming out/in , I've left it open for now but I'll go back some time and switch em off

Today I opened another one and there was another smaller box inside with an electrical panel with breakers etc, I'll target them both when I next go out ..

Wow, Im actually considering getting those now. They could be awesome for ops, IF you had a very specialized plan to use them. I think they'd be quite a hassle if you didnt have a specific use for them. People wearing them look liek fucking aliens though. Probably a big intimidation factor if you saw a guy in a mask at 2am, sprinting around in these.

Yeah, it takes a couple of minutes to put them on/off.

It doesn't look like they are going fast, but they are actually bouncing along around 25mph. To put that in perspective, Olympic Kenyans can sprint about 27mph. The average cop, not warmed up, packing his equipment will be lucky to run 20mph for more than 20 seconds. Thats on flat ground. That isn't even counting the time you would gain on him as you bounced over fences and flew down 3 flights of stairs at a time.

A friend's story;

He Tried to smash a 1m x 4m window once using a 15x15x45cm piece of wood.....The window didnt even break, then, for some reason, the door opened . He did it during daylight, was a decent haul, something like $200 in cash.

When your trying doors with those long handles that open the door, press down on them pretty hard. Sometime's they arent installed properly/the bolt doesnt go far enough in and so the pressing down of the door handle pop's it out. Otherwise doors that open outwards can have the pin in the middle of the hinge removed(tried and tested) and take the door off, flywire doors can be unlocked if you get one of those types, and doors with cheap locks(with the lock/handle as 1 piece) can have one handle smashed off then opened using a screwdriver/pliers, depending(usually theres a square hole which the screwdriver can go into.

A method which is very common around here(like 10 stores i know have had this happen) is to use a sledgehammer, just smash the lock off, open the door and get the loot. Avoid damage to the door itself if you can, as their a pain in the ass to fix, and if you get caught will cost you a shit load more.

The name says it all. A german site (Unfortunately yes it's all in german) dedicated to independently testing many kinds of camo. It has Hundreds if not thousands of pictures of various camo's in different environments. You can translate it to english, but you dont really need it. It's easy to navigate and the pictures speak for themselves.

It's not so much an update as much as a replacement. Right now only the core of the guide is finished, and because the guide isn't specifically geared towards night ops, but B&E in general, I'm not sure how useful it'd be for this topic right now. I've convinced a couple Lockpicking101 regulars to take a load off my hands and focus on the lock defeating sections, complete with diagrams and pictures, while I did a rather massive write-up on alarms (like an actual how-to on things like the mylar shield and motion sensors I couldn't be bothered to explain to the kewls that infected the topic), brute force and other unusual entry methods, and currently in the middle of general stealth tactics - also all with diagrams and pictures. Stealth for me is a ridiculously huge subject since I've been hunting, sneaking around, and breaking into places since I was little and I'm trying not to leave any stone unturned. Think of it as an all-encompassing "God guide" meant to address any and all questions applicable to modern stealth and security.

I wrote Way of the Shadow honestly because I was really interested in night ops at the time. This guide is driven more by my anger towards all the fucking kewls spewing shitty information, the fact Way of the Shadow is an embarrassment to what I know now, and elitist "know-it-all" who try to hoard some of the knowledge on their password protected FTPs and whatnot. Every possible way into something I'm trying to cover, whether it's a night ops-style entry, or an all out brute force last resort and the few people here that know about my background from after I "left" know that when it comes to brute force I naturally know a few things that maybe a handful of people on Totse know, and if there are more, they're not regulars or even moderators on here.

Way to be a douche to someone who has contributed more to this forum than you ever will in your lifetime. Sure he made a typo, and people are allowed to do it. We aren't some sort of fucking spell-checking machine. So, get your head out of your ass, and maybe you will learn something.

I'm not taking anyone else on, the only reason I chose the other two people is because they're lockpicking FREAKS and better than I likely will be in a long time when it comes to lockpicking (to also including autojigglers/lock pullers/bump keys/etc) manufacture and use. With all due respect, I don't feel comfortable trusting the other sections to anyone else.

And Enrapture, thanks for the support but it wasn't needed haha. He wasn't pointing out a typo, and I never made one. I said "if there are more" referring to if there are more people with my background. A few guys on here know what I mean, and I've shown my certificate/pin for said background. It's not B&E related at all, unless you REALLY want into somewhere badly so it's not too important, it was just an inside joke on brute force methods.

Thought I'd give this a bump.

I was gonna go out the other night but had to work unfortunately, I'm a third shifter.

Wtf's your problem? Post something informative or go crawl back into the hole you live in. And the title means nothing, read the contents and you'll understand, but i assume you cant read, since you cant even use the basic points of a sentence, namely CAPITALS at the start of a sentence.

The point is whatever you want it to be. You could be stealing, gathering information, setting up surveillance, or just plain exploring. Personally, I like going out at night, sneaking around in the shadows, and stealing shit if the opportunity arises. If one were to get good enough at it, you could get a shit load of money from it. It will also be good experience for when I'm in the military.

@the guy that raged at "The Way of the Shadow": It's actually a pretty good read.

Narnia. It is a silly place.
Arrow Re: Night Ops X
^ I think the military will probably teach you far more in the way of night ops skills than you'll actually take going in. Still any skill, technique or trick that might give you an edge over enemy forces is quite worthwhile; they're pretty fucking sneaky themselves which is part of the reason thousands of U.S. troops have died these past recent years. But I digress.

I highly recommend you all pick up the book Confessions of a Master Jewel Thief by Bill Mason.

I'm currently reading it and while the stories won't teach you how to steal millions in cash and jewels like the author was eventually convicted of doing, you will surely learn the importance of luck, skill, and surveillance.

Yeah, but being good at the shit they make you do the first time they make you do it would be cool. I'm sure I'd still learn a lot, but knowledge of the basics would be a great help. I'm gonna try and be a Navy SEAL, so I'm sure I have a SHIT TON to learn still.

Copy and paste from elsewhere, for what's it's worth - my take:

I feel that the mission objective always takes a back seat to the road there. An urbex explorer trying to hop yards might alert someone, and go home disappointed because he didn't reach the place he wanted to check out. The night operative might alert someone, and return home with an experience, and knowledge to pour into his next night op. It's "Can I get there?" instead of "What's in there?"

This is why we have people doing things like sneaking into police parking lots. We all know damn well what to expect, but can we do it? We're not exclusively exploring, we're testing our ability, seeing how far we can push the envelope.

And Enrapture, thanks for the support but it wasn't needed haha. He wasn't pointing out a typo, and I never made one. I said "if there are more" referring to if there are more people with my background. A few guys on here know what I mean, and I've shown my certificate/pin for said background. It's not B&E related at all, unless you REALLY want into somewhere badly so it's not too important, it was just an inside joke on brute force methods.

Dude, I don't even remember typing that, I was so fucking tired.. In any case, I apologize Mr. Obvious, even I can be a douche sometimes. :P

Went on an op a few days ago. We snuck around but me and my partner didn't wanna do anything too illegal because there was massive footprints. No snow, just the frost on the grass left huge footprints. If we attracted any police attention to ourselves, they would have followed two sets right to my back door. So yeah it was pretty lame, but nice to finally get out.

you couldn't have somehow avoided the grass as to not be detected? sidewalks? fences? create such a trail of prints as to make it impossible to lead?

Well fellow operatives, it's been real. Guess life here's coming to a close.

It's not much, but there's a small forum on the subject you can find here:

Also, if anybody wants to get anything else up and running, or if you've got any questions, you can catch me on MSN or email me at [Psychlonic\[at\]hotmail.com](mailto:Psychlonic[at]hotmail.com)

Stay in the shadows.

Well, it's been a long road, and i'm guessing that this will probably be my last post here at the temple of the screaming electron, so i might as well make it here in this thread, dedicated to the very subject that compelled me to join this place many years (and several usernames) ago.

Thank you all for posting here, and for anyone who might read this thread one last time - forums come and go, but the true spirit of night ops will always live on, be it under that name or a different one, through its operatives.
